HEY YOU

Liven up! You guys are dead-beats! In case you haven't heard, the audience of this show is supposed to be one of the best things associated with it (besides, of course, this cast). Well, you people are so quiet and so passive, you actually make the Providence RHPS audience look almost good (I'm sorry, that was an insult - I take it back). Think about it - how much fun is it to watch a movie where nobody throws toilet paper at cripples, where nobody squirts "rain" all over the place, where no one yells so loud that you can't hear the movie, huh?

Sincerely,
lufugit,
the anonymous cast member.

SCOTT SPEAKS

by Bob Andoscia

"THAT ELUSIVE SPARK"

After recently viewing "Frankenstien," I began to notice similariyies between "Frankenstien" and the RHPS. Not only in concept, but in the scenes also. The concept parralles in that a scientist, presumably mad (or obsessed), creates life. This new creation then begins to deviate in his actions. In "Frankenstien," the monster runs amok creating havok. In the RHPS, the creation turns his libido towards Janet, and not towards Frank, for whose pleasure he was created. The scenes are simular in that they are both set on violent stormy nights, when there is a great deal of lighting to use as "that elusive spark," that is the breath of life." In both creation scenes, there is the turning of the wheel done by the serveant. The commands to "throw open the switches." The lowering of the overhead apparatus is the final factor in bringing life to the lifeless. This apparatus, in "Frankenstien," shoots sparks. But, in the RHPS, it was the multicolor liqued that brought life. But in either case, life began with a shaking, lifting hand.

p.s. - I miss everyone at the show, especially the one who loves apple crepes.

FIRST!

Congradulations to Roy Dee Parker, Jr. Roy was the first person to respond to NEW ENGLAND ROCKY'S call for letters. Roy is the type of person that makes the show what it is because he keeps bringing new people to the show every week. He also found and corrected a flaw in SCOTT'S PUZZLE. Rest assured, the good doctor is looking into the matter right now. He thanks you for your keen observation, and said he appreciates your kind words. As promised, Roy will receive an index card with all our signatures on it. It will take me a little while to procure all the names, though, as I must now go and deal with the firery moods of the cast members in order to get them all to sign the card. Wish me luck.

By the way, in case you didn't notice, how do you like the new heading format at the top? Not bad, eh? And to think, you thought that it couldn't get any better!
