

WHY DO YOU COME TO ROCKY HORROR?

I am seeking answers to the title's question - Why do you come to the RHPS? I don't expect any two answers to be alike at all. There are so many possibilities, only a few of which I can imagine. You've all got your own worlds and therefore your own reasons. Some of you probably have more than one reason. Some of you will have short answers, some long answers. Could it be to see the movie, to see the cast, to see the audience, to take part in the audience participation? Are you obsessed or just a little crazy over one of the stars of the film, or one of the characters, or (oh my God!) one of the cast members? Is it that it is so unique a happening? Is it to escape another part of your life for a few hours? Is it just to pick up a copy of this newspaper (I'll bet)? Do you come here often, occasionally, or are you a "virgin?" Does the show provide you with a place to meet people? Do you come here to see a person in particular?

I am all ears and ready to listen to you because I want to know your reality? I could go on with possibilities of your presence here, but I would really rather hear your reasons. You are all individuals out there and I'm sure each of you has their own reasons for going. The address is below, as always. If you don't object, I would like to put part or all of some of your reasons for going to the show in this paper, even if you'd rather remain anonymous. This question is open to all. Just what in hell are you doing at the Rocky Horror Picture Show tonight?

THE BURNING

Be no doubt about it, Megaman was burned in effigy. There was not a great deal of attendance, but for those who were there, it was glorious. An unexpected event took place when Megaman's head blew straight into the sky, engulfed in flames, approximately 15 feet above the neck. I thought I had knotted down the head to the chest tight, but the buildup of pressure from the feet up through the legs and chest caused by the dowsing of the body with gasoline (to enhance and quicken the burning) was just too much. Megaman had on a light green shirt and a dark green pair of pants. He was stuffed with crumbeled-up newspaper. His head was a paper bag with his expression drawn on it. He held a cast list in his left hand.
