JUST A LITTLE SUGGESTION

It has long been a tradition at the RHPS to throw rice, toilet paper, toast, confetti, and many other good things. This is a tradition that has long stood, and it will always stand at the show wherever it is shown. It is not the purpose of this article to change that.

But, in order to build character, people must learn to add to their repertoire. Perhaps, yet another item could be thrown that would even more enhance the tradition of the show. I don't know. It could be anything that is safe. Let's see. Just as an example off the top of my head, wouldn't it be something if audience members started a tradition of throwing money in denominations of half dollars (or more) at the end of the show up to the front of the theatre. Yeah. Now that I think of it as a serious idea instead of the out-of-the-air example it was just a minute ago, I think it could really work. Why go on struggling to come up with something else when I've come up with a sure winner? The more I think of it, the more ~~Gents~~ sense it makes to me. Really. That's it! Yup. That's what we'll do from now on. It'll be great. And, as the tradition spreads throughout the country and world, we will always be known as the place where it all started. Alright! How'd you like to be famous? Throughout the the whole world!

Tell you what. Want to make this thing really work? Let's get this thing to really click. We'll get a bag (as a matter of fact, I'll take the responsibility of digging one out myself just to get the ball rolling) and put it out when the show is over (I'll even take care of that myself too) at the front of the theatre. You won't even have to waste your arm throwing anything. I want to make this as easy as possible for you. You'll be able to just walk up and drop your load off, so to speak. Let's not get involved with throwing things. I mean, we're not all basketball players. Besides, if the money doesn't make it into the bag, the tradition is void. It's got to get in there. Then you'll be able to think - "I've actually been part of RHPS history!"

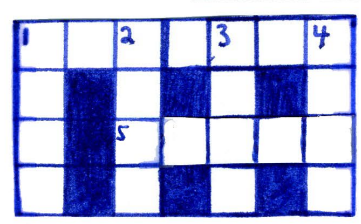

This is gonna be soooooo good! I can't wait to watch this new tradition grow.

Allright, all you Transylvanians! I'll do my part and bring the bag. I'll set it up and everything. The rest is up to you. Let's make this a big $uccess!

PS

Don't go asking all the other cast members or the theatre manager about this new tradition. They needn't know about it anyway. It'll be our own little secret. I'll uphold the cast's part in the tradition myself. They're too busy doing the show and picking up afterwards, so stay away from them with the new tradition. Just follow instructions and put the money in the bag. And then go away and leave. Quickly.
