WE NEED YOUR HELP

This article is not written to cowards, but addresses the problem of cowards. Since the percentage of cowards comprises only about 1% of the audience, I'd rather talk to YOU, the remaining 99% of the audience. Besides, the cowards don't read this anyway.

I want to ask your help in weeding out the cowards who can ruin everything for both the audience and the cast. If you see someone doing a cowardly act, or getting ready to, we need you to quietly leave your seat and tell us or management or security about them. Also, please allow us to take you out for breakfast after the show because we like to eat with our friends.

Cowards are not people who throw toilet paper, rice, confetti, toast, croutons (that's being cheap, but not cowardly), and water. These items are part of the tradition of Rocky Horror.

Cowards are the ones who care nothing about the show. They are the ones who enjoy hurting other people. They throw hard objects at people in the audience and cast who have their backs turned to them. There are only 1 of them to 99 of us, but they can ruin the show for everyone. You don't have to worry about a coward when you are watching them because they don't want a direct confrontation with you since they suffer from obsessive whimpiness. But they are to be feared when you are not looking at them.

You have the cowards to thank for the search you must go through when you enter the theatre. The security officer does not enjoy checking everyone of the audience. He knows most of you are OK. But, he has to do his job, whether he likes it or not, because occasionally a whimp comes in trying to hurt someone.

Last week, the cast had to stop doing the show because a coward hit a young girl with a hard object. She never saw anything coming. What kind of a person does that? What kind of a person goes around hitting girls, let alone anyone not looking?

I have done the show in many theatres. Comparing all of them, management allows a lot of freedom here. They realize this is not an ordinary movie. They have been very flexible in allowing for the tradition of the show to carry on here. But with freedom also comes responsibility. It's too bad some whimp has to ruin that freedom for everyone else. Think about it. What purpose do the cowards serve? They are so few in number, yet they can ruin so much. What good are they? Let's get rid of them.

p.s. - if anyone has any thoughts on this subject (or any other for that matter), I'd really like to hear from you, whether in person or by mail. I want to know what you think.

NEXT WEEK

Hopefully, the paper won't have to be devoted to such a negative subject, and we can get back to our regular jolly selfs.

Have a blastin', but safe,
Fourth of July! BAVA-BOOM!!!
