The Story Behind The Rocky Horror Picture Show Part Three: ROCKY TAKES ON THE COLONIES!

Craig S. Senecal

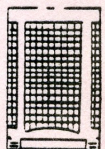

Things looked bright for Richard O'Brien and his ROCKY HORROR SHOW, because an American producer named Lou Adler wanted to present the show in his Los Angeles Cabaret Theatre called the Roxy. The rights were acquired in thirty-six hours and plans were made to cast the show for the U.S. of A! Tim Curry was again cast as Dr. Frank N Furter. Joining him were Jamie Donnely, Bruce Scott, Boni Enten, Graham Jarvis, B. Miller, Abigale Hanes, Meatloaf, and Kim Miller. The show opened in March of 1974 and played for six months, relying heavily on cult audiences. In March of 1975 THE ROCKY HORROR SHOW opened on Broadway...and bombed! It played for only 49 performances, and the producers lost over 400,000 dollars.

It didn't seem to matter though because the film version, was already in production, again with Tim Curry. With a budget of One million dollars, the film also starred Barry Bostwick, Susan Sarandon, Meatloaf, and Richard O'Brien. The film opened in September of 1975, and again bombed! It seemed that Richard O'Brien's luck had changed. Would ROCKY HORROR cease to exist? It didn't look good.

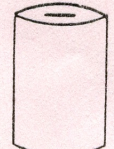

SOON....PART FOUR....ROCKY IS REBORN....How the ROCKY HORROR PICTURE SHOW was rediscovered and turned into the biggest cult movie of all time!
