Tim Curry's play "Me and My Girl" is doing well all over the United States. But what about locally? Well, you may have read in this paper a few weeks ago that the play might be showing at the Providence Performing Arts Center, but, to tell the truth, it looks grim. The reason it might not be shown there is because the production company for the tour wants to book the show in Providence for a week. (eight performances) But the executive director of the Providence Performing Arts Center said, "No, no, no." He only wants to book the show for a weekend. (five performances) His logic behind having the show for only five performances is that he doesn't think the show will sell very well for a whole week. Is this man crazy???? Doesn't he know that the play stars the actor who played the lead role of the greatest cult movie of all time?? Doesn't he know that we get an average of about two-hundred people that come to Rocky Horror each weekend who will probably want to see Tim Curry with his clothes on for a change?? Come on, man!! Open your damn eyes and see the demand for the show in R.I. Stop thinking with the money you so honestly deserve for sitting at a big desk all day behind a closed door and telling your secretary, "If anyone calls for me, I'm not here" and treating all your employees like shit. If we don't get any results on this subject in the near future, maybe we will have a bunch of people at the show sign a big book that states that these people want to see the show come to Providence. Groups will get action, not individuals.
