

1/2 YEAR

Yes, we have made it to 1/2 year of the RHPS at the MBC. In honor of the half-year celebration, a very special damn good preshow has been put together for this weekend's Saturday night. The MBC has bought and installed NEW speakers in order to make the preshow better than ever. As a matter of fact, the MBC (Meadowbrook Cinemas dummy) has been testing those speakers out the past 2 weeks by playing regular movies weeknights to make sure they are working properly for Rocky Horror.

Now that we have made it for one half year at the MBC, what is the next goal for this theatre? (You might ask)...To CRUSH Warwick record! Rr

NEW YORK — Welcome back to the Dreaded Thursday Night Game, the Big East tournament's answer to the Rocky Horror Picture Show.

An event that has reached cult status, it used to be the Dreaded Wednesday Night Game before last season, when the tournament started a day later to accommodate CBS weekend coverage.

Played out before 19,000 empty seats in Madison Square Garden and a smattering of groupies who may or may not have wandered in from the catacombs of Penn Station to keep warm, the Dreaded Thursday Night Game is something to be avoided.

As most of you know, Tim Curry will be seen in the play "Me and My Girl" touring the U.S.A. Well, the tour will start in October, at San Francisco CA, and will stay at the city of love for about three months. Then it will move to San Diego before continuing across the cantal and Eastern United States before it reaches the boarders of New York (there is already a permanent acting troop of that play in N.Y.C.).

Tim Curry will be busy with that, and only that untill the tour is over in one year. If you go to see him in the play, you won't be dissappointed, he is on stage almost the entire show.

Just thought we'd share some news about an event around the USA that WE in RI won't get to see because of foolish decisions at the Providence Performing Arts Theatre (see RIR # 24 "Yuppie Jerk").

Thanks for nothing.
